COOK IN A VOLCANO

HOTEL TERRA NOSTRA

> No need for ovens. On Sao Miguel in the Azores, staying at the Terra Nostra Garden Hotel means eating from a volcanic geyser. Surrounded by mineral and thermal hot springs in the Furnas Valley, order the cozido das furnas stew from the on-site restaurant. This is not a bland, boiled meal. They fill a pot with pork, beef, chicken, local linguica and murcela sausages, carrots, sweet potatoes and tarot root. Then the pot will be lowered into an active geyser field next to a geyser-heated lake. Your meal will stay down in this hole for about five hours until perfectly steamed. The result? A explosion of flavor worth the wait. bensaudehotels.com

SINGAPORE STREET FOOD

MAKANSUTRA FOOD SAFARI TOUR

> It's a gastronomic world's fair of flavors: Malay, Chinese, Indian, Peranakan, Eurasian. Singapore's food scene has centuries of converging influences. But oh does it saute, steam, fry and roast in a divine way. Tasting it all seems an impossible feat. But luckily, Singapore's 16,000-plus street vendors are now concentrated in hawker centers around the island for easy gorging access. (Some are even open 24 hours a day!) To hit the food stalls like a local, book a Makansutra Food Safari Tour with master of Singapore cuisine K. F. Seetoh. (You might recognize him as a judge from the finale of Top Chef D.C., which was shot in Singapore.) One of Seetoh's expert guides is all yours for four hours, leading you to

You're sure to start salivating with a menu like this:
fried hokkien prawn mee, satay, chili crabs, oyster omelet ...
